Alenandria Ganette:

M NDAY EVENING, NOV. 25, 1901.

GENERAL FORREST'S CAREER. General Forrest, although known as "the uneducated soldier," was one of the greatest cavalry leaders of the South. Sherman once remarked: "After all, I think Forrest was the most remarkable man our civil war produced on either side."

Nature had so endowed Forrest as a soldier that he unconsciously employed tactics which Napoleon had reduced to one of his favorite methods when One of his favorite methods when making an attack was to convert one-third of his troopers into foot soldiers, who formed a skirmish line, and then charging with the remainder in two bodies on flank and rear.

At Murfreesboro, Tenn., with 1500 men he carried the fortifications, captured 1200 prisoners, among them two brigadier generals; destroyed $700,000

brigadier generals; destroyed $700,000 worth of supplies, took 600 wagons, 500 head of stock, a battery of artillery, and only sus ained a loss of 16 killed and 25 wounded.

His march from Columbia with a brigade of 2000 across the Tennessee river in the face of the enemy, who were 12,000 strong, and what he accomplish-12,000 strong, and what he accomplished is well-known history.

A war correspondent representing the northern press, in reporting his raid into west Tennessee, said.

"In the face of 10 000 Federal troops, Forrest, with less than 4,000, has marched right through the Sixteenth Army Corps, nine miles from Memphis, carried off 100 wagons 200 cattle, 3 000 carried off 100 wagons, 200 cattle, 3,000 conscripts, destroyed several railroads and many towns."

and many towns."

Forrest was a grand type of man—in strength, statue and audacity. When aroused his temper was like a thunderstorm, but he was naturally genial and informal with his subordinates. As a disciplinarian he would brook neither negligence nor blunder. He put woman on a pedestal and made it imperative with every man in his com-mand to protect her from the elightest insult at all hezards. Forrest had a pure heart, and, although when excited ne became profane, he detested ob-

That he was a stranger to fear and wore the charm of life is illustrated in the fact that he killed with his own hand 30 men and had 29 horses shot
